

Doc Searls Weblog

doc.weblogs.com

Doc Searls has been blogging since November 1999. Searls is the senior editor of Linux Journal, a co-author of The Cluetrain Manifesto (www.cluetrain.com), and advisory-board member of several tech companies.

Searls originally intended the blog to be a companion of the book version of The Cluetrain Manifesto, but it quickly became more personal. Today, he sees the blog (shown in Figure 18-5) as an ongoing conversation, a place to bounce ideas off interested readers and refine his thinking. Searls blogs on all kinds of topics, from the weather to technology. His entries are typically short, link-filled, and personal. He frequently mentions his activities and family.

Figure 18-5:
Keep tabs
on all kinds of news and information on the Doc
Searls
Weblog.

Home

Bio

Discussions

2004 Events
Macworld/SF
CES/Las Vegas
LinuxWorld/NY
eTech/SD
Demo/Scottsdale
PC Forum/AZ
DLS/San Diego
ICTexpo/Linuxworld
Dublin

Sunday, December 5, 2004

XML

Archive:
December 2004
 Sun Mon Tue Wed Thu Fri Sat
 1 2 3 4
 5 6 7 8 9 10 11
 12 13 14 15 16 17 18
 19 20 21 22 23 24 25
 26 27 28 29 30 31
Nov Jan

Blogroll

Technorati
RageBoy
Dave

What it wasn't

The Washington Post unspins many tales told about Pat Tillman's death:

Millions of stunned Americans mourned his death last April 22 and embraced his sacrifice as a rare example of courage and national service. But the full story of how Tillman ended up on that Afghan ridge and why he died at the hands of his own comrades has never been told.

Dozens of witness statements, e-mails, investigation findings, logbooks, maps and photographs obtained by The Washington Post show that Tillman died unnecessarily after botched communications, a mistaken decision to split his platoon over